IV. Reading Comprehension. Read the following two paragraphs and then choose the best answer to each of the questions that follow them. 20%

A. In the 1932 elections, Franklin D. Roosevelt, only the third Democrat to be elected to the presidency of the United States since 1860, overwhelmed Hoover by assembling a coalition of labor, intellectuals, minorities, and farmers. The country had reached a crisis point by the time he was to be inaugurated in 1933, and quick action had to be taken in the face of bank closings. Under his leadership, the New Deal, a sweeping, pragmatic, often hit-or-miss program, was developed to cope with the emergency. The New Deal's three objectives were relief, recovery, and reform. Millions of dollars flowed from the federal treasury to feed the hungry, create jobs for the unemployed through public works, and provide for the sick and elderly through such reforms as the Social Security Act. In addition, Roosevelt's administration substantially reformed the banking and stock systems, greatly increased the rights of labor unions, invested in massive public power and conservation projects, and supported families who either needed homes or were in danger of losing the homes they inhabited.

B. I am particularly concerned about the hostility now fermenting between men and women. Just when men and women have the opportunity to mean more to each other than ever before, and when the world, the society and that entity known as the family need them together, they are exploding apart. Men and women are deeply uneasy with and about each other; they circle each other warily, fencing each other; their visual contacts are sidewise, not direct; they are mistaking bodily for interpersonal intimacy. There is little trust between them. One reason for this may be that women have come so far, so fast. In the span of my own lifetime, women have achieved rights and freedoms undreamed of in the previous century. By contrast, in the same period, males, who have always had the rights, have achieved far fewer freedoms. Only recently have they begun to emerge from their age-old stereotyped grooves of earning, governing and fighting, and from their compulsively fixed patterns of masculinity in dressing, professions, recreation and life-style.
